ROBERT F. WILLIAMS

Robert F. Williams won national prominence when, as president of the Monroe, North Carolina branch of the NAACP, he was the victim of frame-up kidnapping charges for his role in organizing the defense of Monroe's Black community from racist attacks in 1963.

Believing he could not receive a fair trial in North Carolina, Williams fled the country. He lived in Cuba and China and finally returned to the United States in 1971. He is currently defending himself against attempts by the state of North Carolina to extradite him from Michigan.

Williams is the author of Negroes With Guns, an account of the lessons of the struggle in Monroe.
